

Diary of a Fashion Model

By GRACE THORNCLEIFFE

Last night I went to the theater with one of my friends from out-of-town. Marie Waters is keenly interested in the drama, but not so much so that she overlooked the stage as an inspiration for her new frocks.

We were enjoying the play when one of the actresses entered wearing the original of the frock that is illustrated.

"There's a charming little frock," said Marie.

"Yes, that is quite smart," I replied. "I think I shall make a sketch of it."

"What sort of material is it made of?" asked Marie, as she watched the wearer walk across the stage.

"It's black net," I replied as I hurriedly noted some of the salient details of the dress.

"Are you sure?" questioned Marie. "It looks like some new fabric, I think."

"Oh," I rejoined, "I don't wonder that you imagine so, for the net is almost covered with rust-colored chenille."

"What?" exclaimed Marie, "do you mean to say that all that rust-colored work is embroidered by hand?"

"No indeed, I don't," was my reply. "It is woven on to the black net."

"Ah, light dawns for me now," said Marie, as she looked at the frock with new interest.

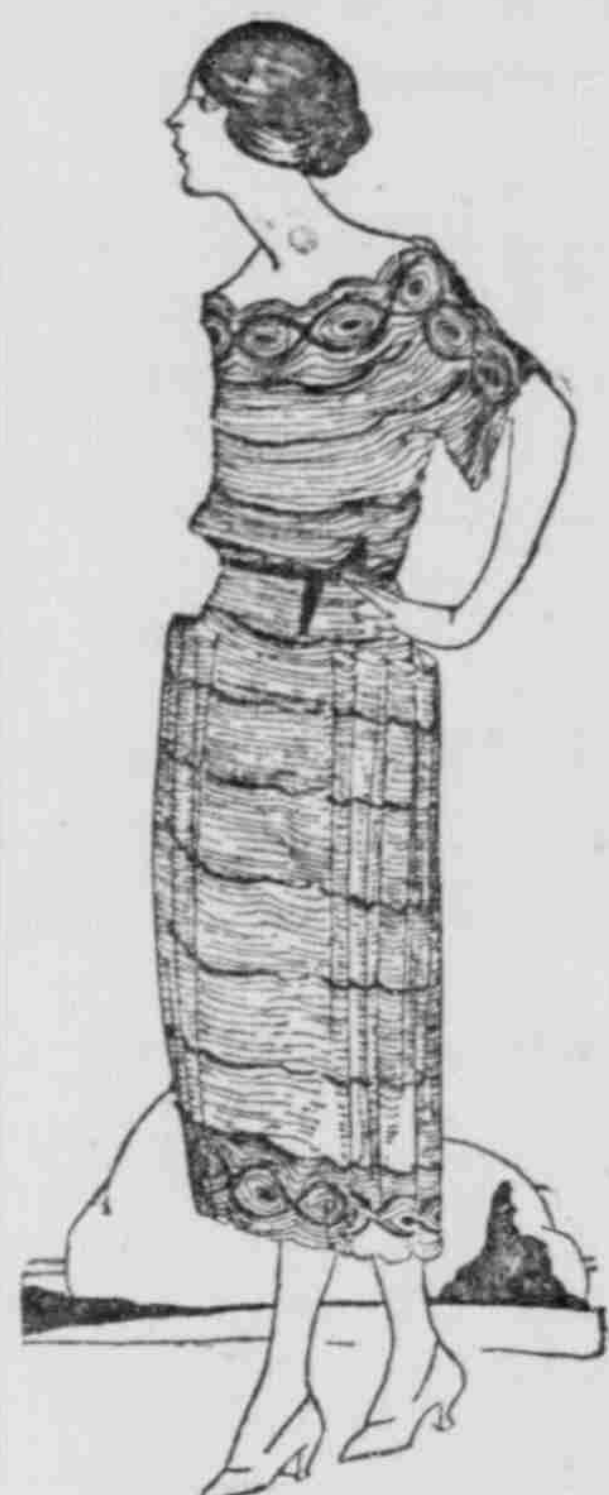

"I think that scalloped effect is interesting," I remarked, rapidly drawing the details of the design.

"Yes, it is good-looking," answered Marie.

"You know chenille is one of the most fashionable trimmings this season," I said, without raising my eyes from my sketch.

"Is that so?" queried Marie. "One really has to come to town to know what's going on in the world of fashion."

"Yes, chenille is used not only on the dainty frock, but on the suit, and if you like you can have one of those scarf-like veils lavishly embroidered with chenille about the border," I announced.

Bring Action to Oust 'Soft' Drink Emporiums Here

Asks Courts to Restrain Activities of Alleged Notorious Places.

Civil action against the proprietors of a soft drink parlor on W. Ford st., and a restaurant on S. Chapin st., was instituted in local courts Thursday morning in an effort to have these places of business declared a nuisance and the proprietors enjoined from further engaging in business of that character.

In each instance $1,200 damages are sought and a court order prohibiting further alleged unlawful activities.

Mrs. Stanislaw Dominiak, has entered action in superior court No. 2, against Steve Pyza, at 1326 W. Ford st. In the complaint Pyza is charged with sale of intoxicating liquors in the store of the Ford st. building. It is alleged men are frequently seen emerging from the place into the street in company with undesirable characters and that many other persons visiting the saloon, upon refusal to pay exorbitant prices, have been beaten up and thrown out by the defendant and his associates. Slot machines, gaming devices and general law-breaking on Sunday are alleged to be some of the activities in sway at the place of the defendant.

The complaint states the place is notorious throughout the city and has given the neighborhood a bad reputation it would not otherwise have.

Similar action has been entered in the superior court No. 1 by Julius Matjes against Ernest Brassyovany, proprietor of a restaurant at 419 S. Chapin st. It is alleged the place is used for sale of intoxicating liquors, and further that men are seen frequently emerging from the place in company with women of shady character and that gambling devices of various kinds are in operation on Sundays and week days. An injunction to restrain further activities and $1,200 damages are sought by the plaintiff on the ground a general nuisance has been created which has deteriorated the value of other property in the neighborhood.
